Course Title	Introductory Labour Economics
Course/Module Code	ECO 208
Faculty	FMSS
Department	Economics
Level	200
Unit	3 credit units
Pre-requisite	Principles of Economics 1 & 2
Module Overview	This course is an introduction to labour economics with an emphasis on conceptualization and empirical analysis. Topics to be covered include: labour supply and demand, minimum wages, the economics of migration, human capital, inequality, discrimination, unions and strikes, and unemployment.
Aim	This course is designed: to make the student aware of some of the major areas of current research in labour economics; to improve the student's ability to evaluate research in labour economics and to give the student the conceptual framework to pose their own research questions. Upon completion of this course students should have a firm understanding of the way that workers, firms, the government, and trade unions interact to produce the observed labour market. Student should also develop analytical, practical and critical skills to approach real world labour issues.
